

Confidentiality and your Records

The General Medical Council has clear guidance on confidentiality. You can find these at https://www.gmc-uk.org/-/media/documents/Confidentiality_good_practice_in_handling_patient_information_English_0417.pdf

The following is aimed at helping you understand how we apply these guidelines in our practice. It is not intended to be an exhaustive explanation of how we manage data. For more detail please refer to the guidance above.

Information about you

Everyone working for the NHS has a legal duty to keep information about you confidential (private). Your doctor or nurse should not disclose information about your health without your permission unless there is an overwhelming public interest to do so.

Sometimes we may need to share information to make sure you receive the best possible care. You may be receiving care from other health professionals. So that we can all work together for your benefit we may need to share some information about you. We will always endeavor to consult you first.

We only ever use or pass on information about you if people have a genuine need for it in your and everyone's interests. The sharing of some types of very sensitive personal information is strictly controlled by law. Anyone who receives information from us is also under a legal duty to keep it confidential.

Your right to privacy

You have a right to keep your personal health information confidential (private) between you and your doctor or nurse.

The duty of confidentiality owed to young people (including those less than 16 years old) is the same as that owed to any other person. A young person under 16 years old can attend at least one appointment without parent/carer involvement. During this appointment the doctor or nurse will make a judgment as to whether the young person has enough maturity and understanding of the situation to make up their own mind (Gillick competent). We will actively encourage young people to discuss any health worries with a parent or carer, and often young people are happy for information to be shared in this way. However, if a young person is judged to be Gillick competent and wishes for this information to remain confidential, we will respect their wishes, unless there are overwhelming reasons not to.

When we have a duty to break confidentiality

There are rare occasions where we can share information without your consent if this is judged to be in the public interest. This is very rare and we would aim to talk about this with you before any decisions to breach confidentiality were made.

Privacy and confidentiality of your medical records

Your medical record is a life-long history of your consultations, illnesses, investigations, prescriptions and other treatments. The doctor-patient relationship sits at the heart of good general practice and is based on mutual trust and confidence. The story of that relationship over the years is your medical record.

Your GP is responsible for the accuracy and safe-keeping of your medical records. You can help us to keep it accurate by informing us of any change in your name, address, marital status and by ensuring that we have full details of your important medical history.

If you move to another area or change GP, we will send your medical records to the local Health Authority to be passed on to your new practice. However, we will keep a copy of all entries into your records whilst you were registered with us.

Who else sees my records?

There is a balance between your privacy and safety, and we will normally share some information about you with others involved in your health care, unless you ask us not to. This could include doctors, nurses, therapists and technicians involved in the treatment or investigation of your medical problems.

This practice is involved in the teaching of medical students and the training in General Practice of young doctors. If you see a medical student or GP trainee during a consultation, they may be given supervised access to your medical record.

Our practice nurses, district nurses, midwives and health visitors all have access to the medical records of their patients. It is our policy to try to have a single medical and nursing record for each patient. We firmly believe that this offers the best opportunity for delivering the highest quality of care from a modern primary care team.

Our practice staff have limited access to medical records. They need to notify the health authority of registration and claim details and perform various filing tasks on the medical records. All our doctors, nurses and staff have a legal, ethical and contractual duty to respect your privacy and confidentiality.

Where else do we send patient information?

We are required by law to notify the Government of certain infectious diseases (e.g. meningitis, measles but not AIDS) for public health reasons.

The law courts can also insist that GPs disclose medical records to them. Doctors cannot refuse to cooperate with the court without risking serious punishment. We are often asked for medical reports from solicitors. These will always be accompanied by the patient's signed consent for us to disclose information. We will not normally release details about other people that are contained in your records (e.g. wife, children, parents etc) unless we also have their consent.

Limited information is shared with health authorities to help them organise national programmes for public health such as childhood immunisations, cervical smear tests and breast screening. GPs must keep the health authorities up to date with all registration changes, additions and deletions. We also notify the health authority of certain procedures that we carry out on patients (contraceptive and maternity services, minor operations, night visits, booster vaccinations) and other "item-of-service" procedures, where we are paid for performing these procedures.

Social Services, the Benefits Agency and others may require medical reports on you from time to time. These will often be accompanied by your signed consent to disclose information. Failure to cooperate with these agencies can lead to patients' loss of benefit or other support. However, if we have not received your signed consent we will not normally disclose information about you.

Life Assurance companies frequently ask for medical reports on prospective clients from the GP. These are always accompanied by your signed consent form. GPs must disclose all relevant medical conditions unless you ask us not to do so. In that case, we would have to inform the insurance company that you have instructed us not to make a full disclosure to them. You have the right, should you request it, to see reports to insurance companies or employers before they are sent.

We are also actively involved in research and making sure that NHS resources are being used effectively. Anonymised data (data which cannot be traced back to you) is shared for these purposes.

How can I find out what's in my medical records?

We are required by law to allow you access to your medical records. If you wish to see your records, please contact your practice for further advice.

All requests to view medical records should be made in writing to the surgery (see our Freedom of Information Policy)

Our staff and your records

All our staff (including reception staff) are trained in issues surrounding confidentiality and sign a confidentiality clause as part of their contract.

If any member of staff was found to have inappropriately breached confidentiality there would be serious consequences for them. All practices have a disciplinary procedure that would be followed. All staff are aware of this and respect the need for you to trust them at all times.

If you feel you have not been treated in a confidential way please talk to the doctor or Practice Manager who will listen to you and investigate your concerns.

What we will not do

To protect your privacy and confidentiality, we will not normally disclose any medical information over the telephone or fax unless we are sure that we are talking to you. This means that we will not disclose information to your family, friends or colleagues about any medical matters at all, unless we know that we have your written (or verbal if discussed with your GP) consent to do so.

Our staff will not disclose any details at all about patients over the telephone. Please do not ask them to - they are instructed to protect your privacy above all else!

Questions

If at any time you would like to know more about how we use your information contact your practice and we'll be happy to answer your questions.
